Australian construction activity. A lack of follow through following Q3 rebound Q4: -0.4%qtr, +1.0%yr. Previous: +3.7% (revised).

Australia's construction sector has experienced mixed fortunes in the post pandemic period.

This continued in the December quarter, with activity in the sector edging lower, down by -0.4%. That was weaker than expected, Westpac +1.6% and market median forecast +1.5%.

Substantial policy stimulus in 2020 boosted construction demand and generated a sizeable pipeline of work.

However, labour and material shortages represented significant supply headwinds. Spiralling costs have lead to increased insolvencies in the sector. In addition, wet weather and flooding in the first half of 2022 delayed work in the eastern states.

Those disruptions appeared to have eased somewhat in the second half of 2022, with work rebounding by 3.7% in the September quarter (revised up from 2.2%). However, this latest update indicates a lack of follow through in the December quarter.

The December quarter detail of the ABS report reveals that public works remained a growth driver (on increased investment by governments), up by 2.6% in the quarter, to be 6.3% higher over the year and 16.5% above the level three years earlier. Total private construction, by contrast, is 0.4% lower than three years ago.

Private new dwelling activity advanced in the December quarter, as expected, up by 2%, evidence of some easing of supply headwinds. Looking ahead, while the sizeable work pipeline is supportive of activity near-term, approvals are well off their highs and interest rates continue to rise, pointing to a looming downturn.

The private home renovation cycle appears to have turned down, after the surge in 2020/2021, with work falling for a third consecutive quarter the survey reports, down by -5.1%.

Private business construction activity disappointed in the final three months of 2022, despite a sizeable work pipeline – with infrastructure down by -0.8% (albeit coming off a revised 6.3% jump) and commercial building declining by -7.5% (also on the back of a large and upwardly revised rise, of +5.6%).

By state, work in the December quarter rose in NSW, +1.3%, and in WA, +5%, but fell elsewhere.

The fortunes of the construction sector over the three years of the pandemic is clearer on a regional divide.

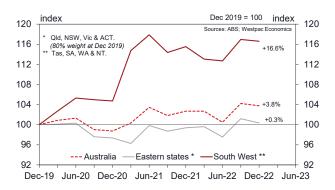

Across the south west of the nation (WA, NT, SA and Tas), construction work jumped, responding to the sizeable stimulus - with activity at the end of 2022 some 16.6% above that prepandemic (end 2019). The upswing peaked in Q2 2021, slipped back and has more recently rebounded (led by WA).

Across the Eastern mainland states (NSW, Vic, Qld and the ACT), labour shortages, covid disruptions and wet weather have countered the stimulus boost. Work at the end of 2022 was broadly unchanged from that at the end of 2019, up by only 0.3%.

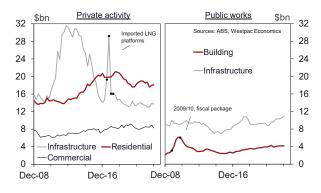

Nationally, the increase in work over the past three years is an underwhelming 3.8%.
