Leading Index firms but detail suggests gains are fragile

Matthew Hassan Head of Australian Macro-Forecasting

The six-month annualised growth rate in the Westpac–Melbourne Institute Leading Index, which indicates the likely pace of economic activity relative to trend three to nine months into the future, lifted to 0.8% in February from 0.6% in January.

The above-trend growth pulse has continued to firm a little but remains consistent with a gradual recovery rather than a sudden surge. Westpac expects GDP growth to track a slow rise over the course of 2025, reaching 2.2%yr by year-end. While that would be a material improvement on the 1.3%yr gain seen in 2024, it implies a relatively subdued performance by historical standards. Australia's growth typically tracks in the 2.5–3% range, about 1ppt above population growth.

Importantly, the component detail suggests the improved growth pulse is more fragile than it looks. Much of the gain reflects a firming in commodity prices and a lower Australian dollar that may now be largely behind us. Meanwhile some external headwinds that have started to impact are likely to become stronger in the months ahead.

The Leading Index growth rate has lifted from -0.33% in August last year to +0.80% currently. Four of the eight components have driven the 1.13ppt turnaround: commodity prices (measured in Australian dollar terms) adding 0.43ppts; a widening yield spread adding a further 0.3ppts; and improving consumer expectations for the labour market and the economy more generally adding a 0.3ppts and 0.18ppts respectively.

For commodity prices, about 80% of the move has come from a lower Australian dollar, which declined 7¢ against the US dollar between late September and late February. Most of that fall came last year, with the AUD/USD cross bumping around a 2¢ range since the start of 2025.

Notably, the latest month has also seen some weakness appear in components that are likely become a more prominent drag in the months ahead. In particular, the S&P/ASX200 fell 4.2% in the February month, as US moves to impose steep tariff increases on key trading partners triggered a sell-off on global markets. That sell-off has continued into March, with the S&P/ASX200 falling a further 4% over the first half of the month. With more tariff measures expected in the months ahead and the full extent of the shock to financial markets, sentiment and activity yet to appear, these developments are likely to become a more significant dampener on the growth pulse in Australia.

The Westpac-Melbourne Institute Leading Index of Economic Activity is designed to assist in identifying turning points in the economy. The index combines variables that reflect different aspects of the economy into a single index that generally produces a more reliable cyclical indicator than any single component taken individually. The Leading Index of Economic Activity provides advance information on the state of the economy and gives early warnings of cyclical turning points.

Domestically-oriented components remain supportive. On a combined basis, consumer expectations, dwelling approvals and aggregate hours worked contributed 0.47ppts to the overall growth rate in the Leading Index. That is up from +0.02ppts six months ago, with tax cuts and, more recently, the RBA's February interest rate cut providing a clear lift to components related to consumer sentiment.

The reconstituted Reserve Bank Monetary Policy Board meets on March 31–April 1. Westpac expects the Board to leave the cash rate unchanged. The RBA has been clear that the decision to cut rates 25bps at its February meeting did not mean further reductions could be expected at subsequent meetings. Any cuts from here will instead depend on the flow of data, especially for inflation, the labour market and domestic demand. The Board will be mindful that inflation has recently declined by more than the RBA had expected and it will be wary of negative economic and financial developments overseas.

As noted, the latest Leading Index shows the Australian economy is continuing to see a gradual lift in momentum but with the detail suggesting external developments are starting to exert a modest drag. Westpac expects a further slowing in inflation will give the RBA sufficient confidence to deliver more rate cuts this year with the next move coming at the May meeting.

Past performance is not a reliable indicator of future performance. The forecasts given above are predictive in character. Whilst every effort has been taken to ensure that the assumptions on which the forecasts are based are reasonable, the forecasts may be affected by incorrect assumptions or by known or unknown risks and uncertainties. The results ultimately achieved may differ substantially from these forecasts.
