MORNING REPORT

Today's economic developments and market movements.

Key themes

Markets were once again in the throes of escalating trade tensions, with US President trump threatening a "massive increase" in tariffs on China, and ultimately announcing an additional 100% tariff after New York close.

The risk-off tone swept through markets, with equities selling off and bonds rallying across the globe. The USD broadly sold off in response, though the Aussie dollar bucked this wider trend and has sunk back closer to the 0.65 mark.

This week, risks around US-China trade and the US government shutdown will remain front-of-mind for markets this week. The release of earnings data from various major US banks will also be watched. Locally, labour market data and RBA speeches will be in the spotlight.

Financial Markets:

US President Trump announced an additional 100% tariff on Chinese imports to the US and export controls on all "critical software". The measures are reportedly in response to China tightening export controls on rare earths and related technologies this week, including those produced outside of China using Chinese inputs. These decisions by China followed the imposition of fees for Chinese ships at US ports and additional restrictions on Chinese firms seeking to operate in the US or use US goods and services. The actions taken by both sides could be positioning ahead of a planned meeting between President Xi and President Trump in late October. Notably the 100% tariff is not due for implementation until 1 November.

- Share markets were broadly selling off following President Trump's threat of a "massive increase" in tariffs on China, sending the S&P 500 (–2.7%), Dow Jones (–1.9%) and NASDAQ (–3.6%) all sharply lower. The official announcement of a 100% tariff, revealed after New York close, will be the dominate story shaping sentiment early this week.
- European equities were also in the red but to a lesser extent, with the Euro Stoxx 50 (–1.7%), Germany's DAX (–1.5%) and London's FTSE 100 (–0.9%) all posting declines. Stocks fell in Tokyo (–1.0%) after stronger gains earlier in the week. The ASX 200 lucked out with only a modest fall on Friday (–0.1%), though futures markets are pointing to a weaker open this morning.
- The USD partly sold off, seeing the DXY retreat –0.6% back to around the 98.85 level on Friday, effectively offsetting the prior day's gain. Across the main DXY pairs, the Japanese Yen appreciated the most against the greenback (+1.2%), while the Euro (+0.5%) and Sterling (+0.4%) also put in a solid innings. In early morning trading, a slightly firmer bid for USD has opened up.
- The Aussie dollar did not fare well upon the tariff announcement on China, paring back -1.3% to just under USD0.6480, though it has clawed back some of this loss this morning with current spot back to a USD0.65 handle. Local labour market data and speeches from RBA staff will be important to watch, but developments around US-China trade and the US government shutdown will be key for the AUD/USD cross.
- Bonds rallied amid a 'flee-to-safety' as markets felt the temperature dialling up around trade risks, taking yields back to lower end of recent ranges. This was most apparent in treasuries, seeing the 10-year yields up 11bps. Bunds and Gilts also rallied but to a lesser extent, with 10-year yields falling 6bps and 7bps respectively. The Aussie futures yield curve shifted evenly lower, with the 3-year and 10-year yield both down 7bps.

Today's key data and events

Times are AEST. All data forecasts are m/m or q/q and seasonally adjusted unless otherwise specified. Forecasts for Australian data are our forecasts and for other countries they are consensus forecasts.

- Market pricing for FOMC rate cuts have lifted at the margin, with now 98% and 97% chance for rate cuts in both October and December, and a cumulative five rate cuts through to April 2027. With global trade risks re-emerging, the next fully priced-in rate cut for the RBA has been brought forward from May to March.
- Crude prices traded to a five-month low over US-China tensions, seeing the first-generic future contract for WTI and Brent fall –4.2% and –3.8% to US$58.90/bbl and US$62.73/bbl. The risk-off swing continued to buoy gold prices around recent highs, up 1.0% to be just under US$4,020/oz. Copper prices finished sharply lower (–3.2%) while iron ore finished an otherwise solid week with a small decline (–0.1%).

International Data:

In the US, the October UoM Consumer Sentiment survey was broadly unchanged versus September, from 55.1 to 55.0 to still be well below average. Assessments of both current conditions and expectations are downbeat, though in the latest month, the former improved slightly while the latter weakened. Measures tracking inflation expectations were also little changed from above average levels, with the short-term expectations at 4.6% and the longer-run expectations at 3.7%. This, combined with recent softening in labour market conditions, are the key factors currently front-of-mind to consumers. Reactions to recent tariff increases will be closely watched next month.

Local Data:

There was no major economic data released recently in Australia or New Zealand.
