MORNING REPORT

Today's economic developments and market movements.

Key themes

'Risk on' continued overnight ahead of key earning reports from the tech megastocks and as the US Fed is widely expected to cut rates by 25bps. This saw the rally in US equities continue overnight led by tech stocks.

US Treasury yields were slightly down ahead of the Fed meeting while the US dollar was also slightly lower. The Japanese Yen and the Aussie were the outperformers, up 0.5% and 0.4%, respectively.

The Q3 local inflation report due later this morning represents a clear risk event for the Aussie, with the market still pricing in around 35bps of cuts over the next year, with a full cut priced in by February 2026.

Copper and iron ore remained steady at elevated levels while gold and crude declined on the back of improving risk sentiment and growing concerns around oversupply, respectively.

Financial Markets:

- The rally in US equities continued overnight led by the tech megacaps as investors position ahead of key earnings updates over the next few days (by Microsoft, Alphabet, Meta and Amazon), and the US Fed's rate decision due tomorrow morning (local time). Nvidia jumped 5.0% after announcing several new partnerships. Bloomberg is reporting that Microsoft, Alphabet, Amazon and Meta are projected to invest US$360 this year on AI. This is expected to jump to nearly US$420bn next year. The S&P 500 was 0.2% higher, while the tech heavy Nasdaq gained 0.8%. The Dow Jones Industrial Average was also 0.3% in the green.
- European markets were generally lower giving up some of the gains posted in the previous session. The Euro Stoxx 50 and Germany's DAX both closed 0.1% in the red, amid a softer than expected read in German consumer sentiment for November. The FTSE 100 in London gained 0.4% led by financials while the CAC in Paris lost 0.3%. Asian markets were generally lower with the Nikkei closing 0.6% lower, the Hang Seng closing 0.3% lower and the CSI 300 down 0.5%. In the local market, the ASX 200 closed 0.5% in the red. Futures are pointing to a positive start to today's session.
- US Treasury yields were slightly down ahead of the US Fed meeting, with both the 2-year and 10-year bond yields down 1bp to 3.84% and 3.97%, respectively. Interest-rate futures have a rate cut fully priced in for the October US Fed meeting with the outcome announced tomorrow morning (local time) and a total of 115 basis points of cuts priced in over the remainder of 2025 and 2026.
- Local yields were mixed on futures with the 3-year bond yield futures increasing 4bps to 3.45%, and the 10-year bond yield futures down 1bp to 4.17%, ahead of the important Q3 CPI report due later this morning. Interest-rate futures have now priced in a 35% chance of a November rate cut and around 35bps of cuts priced in over the remainder of 2025 and 2026.
- The US dollar index edged 0.1% lower to 98.72 as risk on sentiment prevailed. This saw the euro gain 0.1% to 1.1656 while the Yen was the outperformer for the session, up 0.5% against the Greenback with the USD/JPY pair sitting at 152.06. The Aussie continued to climb, up 0.4% to 0.6585 against the Greenback. The AUD/USD reached a high of 0.6591 – the highest intraday level in more than 2 weeks. Risk on sentiment, slightly more hawkish than expected comments by the RBA Governor earlier this week, and expected cuts by the US Fed all supported the Aussie.
- Commodities were generally lower. Gold fell 0.7% to US$3,950 an ounce. Crude markets were generally lower with the West Texas Intermediate sitting at under US$60/bbl as traders responded to growing signs of oversupply as the quantity of oil shipped globally hit a new record high. Iron ore held up above US$106 a tonne despite more evidence that environmental production changes in China have resulted in blast furnaces beginning maintenance and idling, leading to a decline in steel output and weaker iron ore demand. Copper steadied around US$11k a tonne following four days of gains, as investors waited to see whether the US and China will finalise a trade deal and as disruptions to mines in Indonesia and Chile likely to hit global production in the months ahead.

International Data:

The US Conference Board Consumer Sentiment survey signalled consumers are becoming less optimistic. The headline survey index continued its downward trend in October, falling by 1pt to 94.6, a six-month low, yet very close to the long-term average.

Despite weaker consumer sentiment, US house prices surprised to the upside in August. Both the S&P CoreLogic CS and FHFA house price indices reported increases of 0.2%mtm and 0.4%mtm respectively – the strongest result since around the turn of the year.

Echoing a message from similar New York and Dallas Fed surveys, the Richmond Fed Fifth District manufacturing survey indicated that sentiment in the US manufacturing sector ticked higher in October. The headline index rose to -4, the highest level in eight months. Among the survey details, all three components – shipments, new orders, and employment – rose from the September levels.

The October euro area Bank Lending Survey published by the European Central Bank showed a modest net tightening of credit standards for euro area business loans in Q3, with a net 4% of banks reporting stricter criteria. Standards for home loans were unchanged, while consumer credit and business credit standards tightened moderately. Perceived economic and geopolitical risks contributed to more selective lending.
