MORNING REPORT

Today's economic developments and market movements.

Key themes

The FOMC delivered a 25bp rate cut as widely expected, though markets were surprised by Chair Powell's comments that a December rate cut is a "far from a foregone conclusion" and that a "growing chorus feels like maybe [the] Fed should wait a [meeting] cycle" to assess conditions.

This saw treasuries sell-off considerably and the US dollar rally across most key crosses. The S&P 500 finished unchanged from yesterday, but growing optimism ahead of the Trump-Xi meeting saw the NASDAQ and other Asian stocks move higher.

In Australia, hotter-than-expected inflation data dashed expectations for imminent rate cuts, seeing the ASX 200 post its largest one-day decline in seven weeks.

Crude prices posted a small rise following a pull-back in US inventories, but concerns over a 'supply glut' remains a key underlying narrative.

Financial Markets:

- US equities traded in a volatile fashion following the FOMC's 25bp rate cut, with Chair Powell downplaying the likelihood of another rate cut in December. The S&P 500 traded a wide range but was ultimately unchanged from yesterday. The NASDAQ finished in the green (+0.5%), largely on Nvidia's strength as optimism builds ahead of the Trump-Xi meeting. Just as we go to press, a disappointing earnings result from Meta has seen the stock slide in post-market trading.
- Stocks moved higher across Asia, especially in Japan (+2.2%) and South Korea (+1.8%), as President Trump toured the region discussing investment and trade. The ASX 200 posted its largest one-day decline in seven weeks following hotter-than-expected inflation data (-1.0%), and futures markets are pointing to a weaker opening this morning.
- Treasuries sold-off in the wake of Chair Powell's push-back on further imminent rate cuts, seeing the 2-year lift 11bps and the 10-year rise 10bps. However, futures markets are still pricing in a circa 60% chance of a rate cut in December and a further three rate cuts by late-2026. Should the shutdown persist and the dataflow remain disrupted, that leaves relatively few scheduled 'triggers' that could spark a repricing.
- Aussie yields exhibited a massive bear flattener during local trading as expectations for imminent rate cuts were dashed by official inflation data. The sell-off persisted in futures trading following the FOMC meeting overnight, with the 3-year and 10-year (futures) yield now up 8bps and 10bps respectively. Swaps markets are now only pricing in one rate cut by H2 2026.
- The USD rally saw the DXY break back above the 99.0 mark, finishing 0.5% higher at around 99.19. Movements were fairly consistent across the main DXY pairs, with the Euro and Japanese Yen depreciating -0.5% against the greenback, while the Sterling fell -0.6%.
- The Aussie dollar regained a USD0.66 handle following the above-consensus inflation data in local trading, but after the developments overnight, it has fallen back to around USD0.6573 at the time of writing. Developments around the Trump-Xi meeting will be key focus for the currency pair today.
- Crude prices posted a small increase overnight following a larger-than-expected pull-back in US inventories, seeing WTI rise 0.4% to US$60.38/bbl. Despite this, and the impact of sanctions on Russia, concerns over a looming supply glut and the potential for further OPEC+ production hikes remain.
- Gold was mixed but finished little changed from yesterday, down just -0.1% to around US$3948/oz, still some 10% off last week's record high. Copper prices rallied above the US$11,000/mt mark (+1.3%), while iron ore moved 1.3% higher amid growing optimism around trade and stimulus in China.

International Data:

The FOMC cut the fed funds rate by 25bps to a mid-point of 3.875% and announced an end to the quantitative tightening programme, effective 1 December. On the policy decision, there was dissent on both sides of consensus, with one member favouring a 50bp cut and another voting for no change.

Overall, the economy is viewed as being in robust health. The Government shutdown is expected to weigh on growth in Q4, but this cost is seen as temporary, with the economy anticipated to rebound quickly once funding is restored. Chair Powell noted there is no need to fear an absence of government data during the shutdown, with enough data and qualitative guidance available to recognise a material shift in conditions.

The decision to cut was instead characterised as a risk management decision, the Committee assessing that "downside risks to employment rose in recent months". However, it was evident this change was viewed as marginal and that the Committee continue to see upside risks for inflation as well as downside risks for the labour market. Members are also wary of making sure the effects of tariffs on inflation prove temporary.

As a result, Chair Powell made clear in the press conference that a rate cut in December is "far from a foregone conclusion" with "strongly differing views" on the short-term path for policy. Later in the press conference, Chair Powell added that a "growing chorus feels like maybe [the] Fed should wait a [meeting] cycle" to assess conditions.

The Bank of Canada also cut by 25bps overnight to 2.25%. This is likely to be the trough for the foreseeable future with the policy rate now seen as "at about the right level".

Local Data:

In Australia, Q3 CPI printed well above market expectations on both a headline and trimmed mean basis (see here). As a result, Westpac Economics no longer sees an RBA rate cut in November (see here).
