MORNING REPORT

Today's economic developments and market movements.

Key themes

The longest US federal government shutdown ended after the House of Representatives approved, and President Trump signed, a bill to fund the government until the end of January.

US equities were weighed down by negative sentiment and concerns over stretched valuations amid expectations of slower economic momentum. Major government bonds sold off.

In Australia, October employment growth exceeded expectations, with the unemployment rate falling 0.1ppt from a 'thin' 4.5% to a 'fat' 4.3%.

Financial markets adjusted their outlook for the RBA cash rate – the probability of a rate cut around the middle of next year dropped from nearly two thirds to about one third. The AUD initially strengthened, but eventually sold off falling to around 0.6530.

Financial Markets:

The longest US federal government shutdown ended after the House of Representatives approved, and President Trump signed, a bill to fund the government until the end of January. Market focus has now shifted to its economic impact, as attention turns to what the resumed economic data flow will reveal. Revised US data release schedules should become clear in the coming weeks, but some gaps in data coverage likely will remain, given that sampling was not undertaken during the shutdown.

Domestically, October employment growth exceeded expectations, with the unemployment rate falling 0.1ppt from a 'thin' 4.5% to a 'fat' 4.3%. Sharp changes in youth unemployment were the main driver of the September-October volatility, and looking through them, the underlying trends continue to show that the Australian labour market is gradually softening.

- US equities were weighed down by negative sentiment and concerns over stretched valuations amid expectations of slower economic momentum. The S&P 500 dropped 1.6%, with tech stocks down 2.7%, marking their second worst result since the April selloff. In Europe, disappointing earnings announcements dampened sentiment, and the Euro Stoxx 50 fell, led by declines in financial stocks. Asian markets performed better, with Japan's Nikkei gaining 0.4% and Hong Kong's Hang Seng rising 0.6%. Domestically, equities also fell, with the ASX 200 down 0.5%.
- Major government bonds sold off. The 10Y US Treasury yield rose 4bp to 4.11%, maintaining a relatively stable trend of the last couple of weeks. The short end of the Treasury curve also lifted, as investors reduced expectations of a fed funds rate cut in December. European yields – Bunds and Gilts – were 3-5bp higher, reversing the previous day's rally. Australian yields moved higher as well: the 10Y rose 4bp to 4.42%, while the 3Y surged 10bp to 3.80%, as financial markets adjusted their outlook for the RBA cash rate. Following the labour market data, the probability of a rate cut around the middle of next year dropped from nearly two thirds to about one third.
- In FX markets, the DXY fell 0.4%, its sixth decline in the last seven sessions. The EUR and GBP both gained 0.4%, reaching 1.1640 and 1.3190 respectively. The yen appreciated by 0.2% after the Japanese Finance Minister highlighted that "the negative aspects of the weak yen are becoming clearer", sparking speculation about possible government intervention. The AUD initially strengthened following the Australian labour market data, reaching 0.6580, but eventually sold off falling to around 0.6530 in the early hours of this morning.
- In commodity markets, after a 4.2% decline in the previous session – driven by OPEC's sharp downward revision of demand forecasts – crude stabilised, with the December WTI contract up 0.4% to $58.80. Gold eased 0.7%, while copper and iron ore were little changed.

International Data:

US Cleveland Fed President Hamack commented overnight that inflation remains too high and continues to be her top priority when determining policy settings. San Francisco Fed President Daly was non-committal regarding the December policy decision.

Euro area industrial production underperformed in September, rising just 0.2%mth after a 1.1%mth decline in August. The modest recovery in German production, following a sharp contraction in August driven by a significant contraction in the automotive sector, was the main factor. Despite a modest pick-up this year, euro area production levels remain below pre-pandemic levels.

A downside surprise to September UK GDP growth, which came in at -0.1%mth, left the quarterly UK GDP slowing from 0.3%qtr in Q2 to 0.1%qtr in Q3, according to the preliminary release. Annual growth ticked lower to 1.3%yr. The consumer spending remained soft, business and government spending disappointed in Q3. Investment data was mixed: while business investment fell for a second quarter in a row, public investment and private sector dwelling investment were strong.

Domestic Data:

The focus in Australia yesterday was on the latest labour market data. Employment was firmer than expected in October after a weaker showing in September, leaving growth on a three-month average basis around ½ppt below the pace six months ago. The unemployment rate fell 0.1ppt from a 'thin' 4.5% (4.45%) to a 'fat' 4.3% (4.34%); after smoothing for monthly volatility, the unemployment rate is still clearly tracking a gradual uptrend (see here).
