MORNING REPORT

Today's economic developments and market movements.

Key themes

Markets were broadly stable overnight, despite US President Trump downplaying expectations of an immediate agreement with Iran, stating he was “not satisfied” with negotiations and that no one nation would control the Strait.

Brent crude oil prices managed to fall another –4.7% to US$94.93/bbl, providing a backdrop for equities to largely tread water overnight, and for yields and the USD to remain broadly stable.

Most of the action occurred during yesterday's local trading. Australian headline inflation came in slightly softer than expected, sparking a rally in ACGBs as markets moved to effectively rule out the chance of a July RBA hike, while the AUD softened.

Meanwhile, a ‘hawkish hold’ from the RBNZ drove a strong bid for the Kiwi. Ultimately, the AUD/NZD collapsed –1.5%, its largest single-day move since October 2017, pulling the cross down sharply off its 13-year high.

Financial Markets

US President Trump downplayed expectations of an immediate agreement with Iran, stating he was “not satisfied” with negotiations and that no one nation would control the Strait, according to Bloomberg reporting. Still, the market continues to believe a compromise will be struck, with the price of Brent crude falling overnight while US equities holding around all-time highs. Meanwhile, the antipodean markets had plenty to digest yesterday, following a ‘hawkish hold’ from the RBNZ and a downside surprise in Australian inflation data.

- Sharemarkets largely tread water yesterday, despite the apparent lack of progress in US-Iran negotiations and reports of strikes being exchanged earlier in the week. The S&P 500 held steady, the NASDAQ edged slightly higher (+0.1%), while the Dow Jones posted a solid rise (+0.4%), partly buoyed by Snowflake’s announcement of higher capex spend on Amazon’s Web Services. It was a similar tone across the pond, with the Euro Stoxx 50 and London’s FTSE 100 both eking out slight gains (+0.1%)
- The ASX 200 opened weaker yesterday, but a strong rally took shape after inflation data surprised slightly to the downside, with momentum accelerating into the close for a 0.7% gain overall. Other Asian sharemarkets were softer: declines in Hong Kong (–1.1%) and Shanghai (–0.8%) while flat in Tokyo. But following the action overnight, local futures markets are pointing to a weaker open this morning.
- Treasury yields were unchanged, the 2Y and 10Y holding at 4.03% and 4.48% respectively. Market pricing for the Fed still has a rate hike pencilled in for 2027, with the chance of a move by year-end seen as around 62%. Yields were mixed elsewhere across the globe, a slight lift in the 10Y Bund (1bp to 2.99%), a slight fall in the 10Y Gilt (–2bps to 4.86%), and a larger dip in the 10Y JGB (–3bps to 2.70%).
- ACGBs rallied against the backdrop of a slight downside surprise on headline inflation data, seeing the 3Y and 10Y both fall 5bps to 4.50% and 4.86% respectively. This comes as swaps markets effectively rule out the chance of a July RBA rate hike, with August now also seen as unlikely (<50%). Markets still see a rate hike later in the year as likely, but no further moves are fully priced in as of now.
- The USD managed to eke out a small gain, the DXY traded a wide range before settling 0.1% higher at around 99.22. Moves were modest across the main crosses, with the Euro holding steady, the Japanese Yen and Sterling edging around –0.1% lower, while the Loonie lost about 0.2% against the greenback.
- The antipodean currencies had diverging moves in response to their local developments – lower-than-expected

Australian CPI sparking a larger sell-off in the Aussie (–0.4% to USD0.7174) while a ‘hawkish hold’ from the RBNZ drove a strong bid for the Kiwi (+1.1% to USD0.5897). The resulting –1.5% collapse in the AUD/NZD was the largest single-day move since October 2017, pulling the cross down sharply off its 13-year high, to around NZD1.21.

- Despite the apparent lack of progress in US-Iran negotiations, Brent and WTI fell –4.7% and –4.8% to US$94.93/bbl and US$89.43/bbl respectively. Metals were slightly weaker, with LME copper down another –0.7% while LME aluminium fell –1.0%, the latter off a four-year high against the backdrop of downside production risks stemming out of China. Gold also edged lower, –1.2% to around US$4,450/oz, perhaps better reflecting the risk of further upward pressure real yields given the patchy tone of US-Iran negotiations.

International Data

In the US, the May Richmond Fed manufacturing index was firmer than expected, lifting 10pts to +13. Most components improved in the month, including new orders, employment, and particularly shipments.

Local Data

In Australia, the April CPI surprised modestly to the downside on a headline basis (4.6%yr to 4.2%yr), largely due to policy-driven and volatile categories; however, trimmed mean inflation ticked higher (3.3%yr to 3.4%yr) and evidence of pass-through is building (see here). Meanwhile, Q1 construction work done bounced 3.4% higher, surpassing expectations, albeit flattered by mining sector activity (see here).

In New Zealand, the RBNZ kept the OCR on hold as universally expected, but it proved to be a very finely balanced decision, with the 3-3 split vote resulting in the Governor casting the deciding vote to remain on hold. The RBNZ has also upgraded its forecast track for the OCR significantly. Westpac NZ still holds its view that the first rate hike will come in September, but an earlier start in July can’t be fully ruled out (see here).
