MORNING REPORT

Today's economic developments and market movements.

Key themes

Crude oil prices continued to gradually ease despite a still highly uncertain outlook around management of the Strait of Hormuz and the current health of global oil supply, especially in light of renewed threats of escalation from Putin in the Russia-Ukraine war.

Equities were mixed, US markets losing momentum into the close ahead of Nvidia's earnings. Nvidia's Q2 revenue beat expectations, but its sales outlook underwhelmed some investors.

US yields rose and the US dollar firmed after a modest upside surprise in PCE inflation figures, keeping the market's expectation for an FOMC rate hike by year-end 'live', though Chair Warsh's upcoming speech at Jackson Hole will be the ultimate test.

Australian inflation also surprised modestly to the upside, largely stemming from durable goods while household services also continued to make sizeable contributions.

Financial Markets

- Equities had a fairly volatile session, losing momentum heading into the close – the S&P 500 flat, NASDAQ down –0.1% – before Nvidia announced its earnings, with Q2 revenues beating consensus expectations though the sales forecast disappointed some expectations. The Euro Stoxx 50 finished in the green (+0.2%), but London's FTSE 100 slipped (–0.1%).
- Asian share markets were generally in the green, with gains reported across Tokyo (+0.6%), Shanghai (+0.9%), Hong Kong (+0.6%) and Seoul (+1.0%). The ASX bucked the wider trend with a 0.4% decline, driven by tech and energy stocks, and futures markets are pointing to another weak open this morning.
- Treasury yields moved higher following a slight upside surprise on PCE inflation, keeping the market's expectation for an FOMC rate hike by year-end 'live', though Chair Warsh's upcoming speech at Jackson Hole will be the ultimate test. The 2Y and 10Y treasury yields rose 4bps and 2bps respectively, and yields also rose across Europe and the UK.
- A slight upside surprise on Australian inflation data sparked some repricing in interest rate markets, local yields bear steepening as the 3Y jumped 5bps to 4.60% while the 10Y nudged 1bp higher to 5.03%. Swaps markets now see an RBA rate hike in September as closer to a 30% chance compared to just 10% earlier in the week, while a full rate hike is now priced in by February 2027.
- The USD posted a solid bounce, the DXY rising around 0.2% to 99.1. All DXY pairs slipped versus the USD – the Euro was down 0.2%, the Sterling fell 0.4%, while the Japanese Yen edged 0.1% lower. The Aussie dollar bucked the wider trend, outperforming on the day given hotter-than-expected local inflation data, seeing the Aussie finish 0.2% higher and hold on around the USD0.7170 mark.
- Crude oil prices have continued to gradually ease despite a still highly uncertain outlook around management of the Strait of Hormuz and the current health of global oil supply, especially in light of renewed threats of escalation from Putin in the Russia-Ukraine war. While trading a choppy session, Brent and WTI fell 1.3% and 0.2% to US$87.5/bbl and US$82.2/bbl respectively.
- Metals retraced yesterday's gains, with LME copper falling 0.7% off its recent record high. Gold prices meanwhile slid off of its three-month high, down 1.4% to around US$4,590/oz, in response to the increase in real yields ahead of the Jackson Hole Symposium coming up at the end of the week.

International Data

In the US, the Fed's preferred gauge of consumer inflation pressures – the PCE deflator – surprised slightly to the upside, coming in at 0.2% in July versus expectations for a 0.1% print, leaving both headline and core inflation steady at 3.7%yr and 3.3%yr respectively. Meanwhile, personal income and consumption both surprised in the month, gaining 0.4% and 0.2% respectively, which together with the inflation print, leaves real consumption flat in the month compared to an average monthly reading of 0.2% through the first half of the year.

The second estimate to Q2 GDP saw no changes to the headline result at 1.5% annualised, but there were some minor changes to the component detail. Household consumption was revised up a touch from the first estimate (3.2% to 3.4% annualised), but was offset by marginal downward revisions to business investment and government spending as well as a larger drag from net exports. Meanwhile, durable goods orders came in above the market's expectation in July at 1.1%. However, this was due to concentrated strength in transport orders, with orders excluding transport up just 0.4% and core orders (non-defence, ex-air) only 0.2% higher in the month.

Local Data

In Australia, the July CPI came in slightly above expectations, printing 1.0%mth/3.5%yr on a headline basis and 0.5%mth/3.6%yr on a trimmed mean basis, with upside surprises largely stemming from durable goods while household services also continued to make sizeable contributions (see here). Meanwhile, construction activity fell by –2.1% in Q2 due to weakness in the mining sector, whereas activity from data centres and renewables continues to offer support (see here).
